

The anti-rider

Microphones

- Any mic is fine
- If there's a choice, lapel or headset is good
- I can mic myself up

Slides

- I usually use Canva and can send you a link before the event
- I will have the slides downloaded as a Powerpoint and on a memory stick for back-up
- I normally use my own laptop but can use yours if you'd rather
- There's no sound or video on the slides
- Any size screen is fine, and I can even do it without slides if everything breaks

Other tech stuff

- I bring my own clicker, extra-long HDMI cable and a load of adapters, half of which I never use but still carry "just in case"
- If the talk is streamed or recorded, I'll check the sight lines while setting up (I'll need someone to help me with this as I only have one pair of eyes and they're attached to my head)

Everything else

- As long as I can get in to the venue and know where the toilet is, I'm fine
- I will seek out the AV guy (it's usually a guy, usually a guy called Steve for some reason) and liaise with them
- I'll liaise with the BSL interpreters if there are any
- I will eat and drink literally anything (apart from those weird blue drinks in round bottles) and carry my own snacks/drinks in case of emergencies.
